At the Salt Lake Theater on Wednesday afternoon an audience of 1200 people, of whom 800 were persons who had passed the three-score and ten mark, the others were orphana, witnessed a performance of "The Serenade," as presented by the Salt Lakers Opera company. Of the aged people in attendance, the larger number were between 70 and 50 years of age, the red ribbon which they wore indicating this. There were a number who wore a blue ribbon, which showed that they were hetween 80 and 90 years of age, and several wore a white badge, which indicated that they were insaring the century mark. The old people enjoyed the opera apparently just as much as did the younger ones. The latter were from the several orphanages of the city. There was no charge made by those who participated in the performance, nor by the theater management or employees. The Utah Light and Railway company conveyed the aged people to the theater free of charge.
